In recent years, against its own volition the world has witnessed a rapid deterioration in US-Chinese relations, which have already landed on a low level that has not been seen throughout the entire history of their official contacts since 1979. As Fox News reports, even US Secretary of State Mike Pompeo admits that current relations between the US and China can, to a certain degree, be compared with a new cold war. The only difference is that, unlike the situation with the USSR, China is actively involved in the modern Western economy.

At the same time, it is noteworthy that, with the November elections approaching and a tightening domestic time crunch facing American President Donald Trump owing to the coronavirus pandemic and race riots in the country, he is clearly not in the mood to ramp up the confrontation with China. Therefore, the US Secretary of State, Mike Pompeo, took the whole initiative and an active role in whipping up the hysteria of anti-Chinese policy and propagating Sinophobia. And Pompeo is the one who, with stubborn persistency, continues to ratchet up tension everywhere, bringing to light more and more new plots and, for at least a few weeks now, making statements whose overtones the world has not heard since the Cold War.

For example, having severely criticized the decision made by Beijing and Brussels to work harder on reaching a new bilateral investment agreement, Mike Pompeo attacked China due to a national security law in Hong Kong

However, it is quite obvious that no one needs another cold war. In addition, recent events clearly show that Europe is not inclined to put up any opposition to China, as Mike Pompeo wants. It thus turns out that all US attempts to create an anti-Chinese alliance in Europe are ending in failure, and against this background there is a continued, noticeable deterioration in relations between the Old World and the United States, through the obvious fault of the latter.
